

The Lakes Call

I was walking in the woods when I thought I heard a voice whispering. I looked around for the voice, but I couldn't find it. Once I walked for maybe 3 more minutes, then I listened to the same voice again, but it kept talking,

I found out it was a tree talking, before I could talk, scream, or yell. It kept talking but something caught my ear, the tree said a lake down the hill needed some kind of help so I asked where the lake was and the tree told me that all his friends would lead me.

When I was running, I tripped over a stump and scraped my knee pretty badly. All the Sudan, there was another voice, but way more profound, and it said, "Hey, I saw you fall. Do you need somewhere to sit? "

When I heard that, I assumed it was another tree, but it was a rock, it was a pretty big rock, so I sat on it. Once I cleaned my wound, I headed off to the lake. I got to the lake and I was expecting a vice, but there wasn't one, so I sat down for a while to wait. About 2-3 minutes later, the lake was talking and said "Hey you, you need to tell your little friends in the city and tell them to stop polluting the water."

So I came back, filled a jar with water, and checked if I could still hear him. Through the jar, he told me what to tell all of my friends. We told everyone, not just my friends and the lake was happy. I went back to the woods to see if the trees would talk; they did, and we were all friends
