

One door closes another door opens

Once upon a time there was a young boy named Frederick in the forest up by Michigan, near the town of Alvin, WI. He was there because he heard a theory about whoever goes in never comes out. Frederick wasn't from here; he came up to Alvin to test out the theory. He was nervous because he was all alone and scared.

Federick finally built up the courage to go to the forest. First he went to the store to gear up for his trip. He was nervous but he finally went to the woods. Next he went to the entrance of the forest and went in. It was very quiet and Fredrick got suspicious. Fredrick looked around and he saw a purple tail. Then he fell in a deep, deep, deep hole.

Frederick woke up and looked around. He saw a very small door. He opened the door, peeked and saw the forest again. Then Frederick saw a drawer but he couldn't reach it. He reached out of the door and saw a key but he couldn't reach the key so he grabbed a leaf and brought the key closer. Finally Federick got out of the door and he was walking around. He found the purple tail belonged to the queen of the forest. It was a purple tailed bear named Queen Fur. She said "No one ever comes here. People never come to my forest because they do not know me." Federick was surprised that Queen Fur, the purple tailed bear, was talking to him. Federick felt scared of her but realized she was very nice. The Forest of Alvin was not as scary as he thought. Queen Fur was nice and showed Frederick around the forest and found out there were more animals than anyone ever knew.
